

EDITORIAL

Even the second issue of our professional-scientific journal this year, submitted for printing in September 2022, adheres to the content of the principle that we started applying from 2021, i.e. preferably, the individual contributions are oriented on topics related to the pedagogical, scientific and research focus of the Institute of Public Administration and Social Policy, on where the journal is created, while they are supplemented by articles touching on current topics of our present and future.

Three of the four included contributions focus on the issue of public administration, especially territorial self-government. The contribution of M. Matula analyzes the current problems of the public administration in the Czech Republic. The other two contributions are devoted to the issue of territorial self-government, with a sociological (Sosnowski) and a political-legal perspective (T. Alman – J. Volochová). The fourth article responds to current challenges related to the cooperation of the V4 states in individual areas of social, i.e. scientific and research life, such as the institutionalization of the Visegrad cooperation (G. Szabó).

The editors of the magazine and the authors of the individual contributions will be happy if the issue that the readers receive enriches their knowledge of the areas to which the articles are devoted.

prof. JUDr. Igor Palúš, CSc.,
Editor-in-chief